

I object to the FCC proposal.

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved the quality of time I spend at home with family, in that we are no longer bothered by those soliciting my hard-earned dollars, for services I do not desire.

Previously, we could not get through a week without numerous calls. Since adding our names to the Indian Prohibited Call list, we've had virtually no calls. (Often, we can go weeks with no interruptions!) Those who have called have been very polite when told they were violating Indiana's law, where previously, our negative response to their solicitation was met with remarks that were often rude and offensive.

I believe it is important to leave this matter to the individual states control. I trust my elected leaders, and want to leave this important matter under the control of local decision-making and legislation. Our current experience shows they have been very effective, and I would not want the FCC actions to lessen the effectiveness of their good work!

Thank you for your attention, and hopeful agreement with my comments.
